Approved For Release 2004/04/08: CIA-RDP75-00149R000500010057-7

Fulbright Gets to Attend CIA's Senate Briefing

With Senate Foreign Relations this can be given and taken Committee members attending away. It would be more desirator the first time, the Senate's ble if formal action were taken to be also the formal action were taken to be senated to be CIA watchdog committee has by the Senate to establish the received a top-secret intelligence briefing on world affairs. Committee to information about and particularly the Vietnamese operations of the CIA."

Frector Richard Helms gave briefing, under tight security, in the Senate Armed tion by members of the Foreign Services Committee hearing Relations group would be perroom yesterday. The meeting lasted from 2 to 4:30 p.m.

Afterward, Sen. Richard B. Russell, D-Ga., who heads the CIA panel, said the briefings covered "the waterfront." But he added that it was all highly classified and nothing could be revealed.

In what may be the end of a long-standing controversy, Chairman J. William Fulbright, D-Ark., and two other members of the Foreign Relations Committee attended the meeting at Russell's invitation.

Information Sought

Members of the Foreign Relations Committee have been demanding access to information on CIA operations. They ing the appropriations subcommend they should have it because the CIA often involves itself in foreign policy matters.

After the meeting, Fulbright said it was "too soon to say" whether the arrangement would satisfy his committee.

Others from the Foreign Relations Committee who were invited and attended the briefing were Sen. Bourke B. Hickenlooper of Iowa, the ranking Republiean member, and Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield s of Montana, who is third in seniority on the Democratic

Not included was Sen. Eugene McCarthy, D-Minn., who sponsored a resolution last year that would have set up a nine-memintelligence committee, made up of three representatives each from the Appropria-Armed Services and Foreign relations committees. As for yesterday's meeting, Mc-Carthy said:

"This is substance of what we are asking for. There remains, however, a question of whether

May Be Permanent

Russell was asked if participamanent and replied that it would be "as far as I can see at the present time."

Mansfield said he was invited because of his leadership position and added that he understood Senate Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen of Illinois also would be asked to attend.

Russell, however, said the three senators were invited because they were on the Foreign Relations Committee. Since Dirksen is not a member of that committee, the Georgia senator. said he had not been asked to attend.

Sen. Karl E. Mundt, R-S.Dak. was added to the watchdog